

A Historical Site, Through and Through

Tucked away in the heart of Tsim Sha Tsui, FWD HOUSE 1881 — formerly known as the Marine Police Headquarters — was declared a monument in 1994. Its Victorian neoclassical architecture boasts an elegant aura and brims with historical significance.

The Gun

A three-pounder Hotchkiss gun once stood on the lawn's northwest corner. It was exchanged with Jardine's Noonday Gun in 1961, and the original moved to Sai Wan Ho in 1996. The current display is a replica from overseas.

Fireplaces

The Main Building of the Former Marine Police Headquarters was fitted with fireplaces. The original, intricately-designed cast-iron fireplaces have been preserved.

Cells

Three holding cells with over a hundred year of history housed at the Former Marine Police Headquarters have been preserved.

Security Window

The Marine Police officers followed security procedures in receiving as well as returning firearms through the security windows of the ammunition room.

Stable Block

The Stable Block was built to house the horses and was later transformed into garages when motor vehicles were introduced. The original wooden door was preserved.

Pigeon Houses

Pigeon Houses were erected and placed in the Main Building of the Former Marine Police Headquarters. These were believed to have housed carrier pigeons, which were used as means of communication in the 19th century.
